MAINE LAW IN CONNECTICUT.

espendence of The N. Y. Tribune.

NEW-HAVEN, Wednesday, Oct. 25, 1854. Upon a few stubborn facts, I ask the readers of THE TRIBUSE to judge for themselves whether our Liquor Law is a curse or a blessing to Connecticut.

This law is more stringent than the original "Maine

This law is more stringent than the original "Maine Law;" it went into operation the first of August. At that time more than one million of dollars was invested in the wholesale and retail liquor traffic in this city; and the retail sales amounted to more than six hundred thousand dollars annually!

Previous to August first, a census taken to ascertain the number of grog-shops, showed the number to be two hundred and ninety, besides some that the committee could not accretain, though suspected of selling, but thought it three hundred—a low estimate.

The amount of money received, or number of regular customers, at each grog-shop, could not be correctly ascertained; but, at a very low estimate, we will suppose each shop had only five customers; that will give one thousand five hundred regular customers of the dram-shop, in a population of 30,000. Of these fifteen hundred, at least twelve hundred were spending money for liquor, which was really needed by their families for the common necessaries of life—money that ought to have been spent for bread for hungry, half-starved children. About six hundred of this number annually found their way to the Alms-House or the County Jail, helping to swell taxes already burdensome, and leaving helpless families to be supported by charitable and benevolent persons er societies.

Of the $600,000 spent here for intoxicating drinks,
